34	21-May-25	The U.S. Dilemma in the AI Chip War	Ranjana Kushwaha	Ranjana Kushwaha cracks open a short-lived policy that made big waves before sinking without a trace: the AI Diffusion Rule. Introduced by the Biden administration in their final days in early 2025, this was the U.S.'s first serious attempt at compute governance, an effort to control the spread of high-performance chips essential for the development of Artificial Intelligence models, citing national security and strategic competition, particularly with China. But within months, it was quietly withdrawn. So, what happened? Was this a case of policy overreach? A warning from the industry? A global pushback? Or a sign that containing AI innovation isn't as straightforward as flicking a regulatory switch? Ranjana delves deeper into: Why the U.S. sought to regulate the flow of AI compute. What prompted the backlash from tech giants to allies. How this failed rule foreshadows the future of AI geopolitics, compute sovereignty, and innovation in a divided world. It's not just about #chips. It's about power, policy, and the geopolitics of AI compute in a world struggling to keep pace with its own #technology.	https://youtu.be/GXRJYFsFDKU?si=TM6nEuEs8YisqmAi
